

Are You Ready To Be A Borrower?

Borrowing money is a part of almost everyone's financial lives. Home, student, and auto loans allow us to afford the things that are beyond our current financial reach. Credit cards provide convenience in our daily lives that many find essential. Borrowing money may also create serious responsibilities and too much borrowing or the wrong type of borrowing can cause many problems.

Before applying for any type of loan here are some things to consider:

Why are you borrowing? Borrowing for things that provide long-term and lasting value should come before borrowing for things that provide only momentary or limited enjoyment. It is much easier to justify borrowing for a home or a college education than borrowing for a great vacation or a great outfit that you may only wear occasionally.

Do you understand your responsibilities? Remember that any money you borrow must be repaid along with interest. Be sure you can afford the payments that the borrowing will require. Also, spend some time to find the loan with an interest rate and terms that best fits your situation.

Before sitting down to fill out a loan application or arranging a meeting with a loan or mortgage officer, here are some items you may want to have handy:

Your credit report. Most lenders will automatically order a credit report and you should know what it contains. You may order your credit report from the three large credit reporting agencies by calling them:

- Experian - 888/397-3742

- TransUnion - 800/888-4213

- Equifax - 800/997-2493

Proof of income. Depending on the type of loan, you may need to provide a copy of a recent payroll check stub or a W-2 from the prior year.

Tax return. If you are applying for a mortgage or a large personal loan, you will probably need to supply copies of at least one federal tax return.

Financial statement. For mortgages and other large loans, lenders may require that you supply a financial statement listing all your assets and liabilities.

Lenders are loaning you money that they want repaid along with interest. This is their business and they want to make sure that you will be able to live up to your repayment responsibilities. Not only will they look at the items mentioned above, they will also be looking at other aspects of your finances to approve your loan.

Stable employment. A steady job may help give lenders confidence that you will have an ongoing income to repay your loan. If you have a history of several job changes, it may raise a red flag. Be sure you are able to explain these changes in employment.

Stable residence. Lenders usually like to see at least six months of residence at the same place.

Debt management. Having a solid history of timely and regular payments on other borrowing also helps give lenders confidence that you will be able to handle this debt in the same manner.

The decision to borrow money or to apply for a loan is serious and you should thoroughly understand your side of the transaction. Spending a little time to think about borrowing and being properly prepared will make the process easier and may improve your chances of getting the loan approved and being able to get more favorable terms.
